EMERGING ISSUE**

Federal Block Grants for Education:
Impact on Addressing Barriers to Learning????

There appears to be growing bipartisan support for consolidating federal education programs into performance-based block grants. The clear goals are to reduce categorical funding, increase flexibility in use of federal dollars, reduce redundancy, and increase accountability for results. What hasn't been clearly discussed is: Will block grants enhance efforts to address barriers to learning or will they further marginalize such efforts?

Do you have a perspective on this? If so, let us know, so we can include it in our efforts to have this aspect of the issue become part of the discussion.

To post your response directly on our website's Net Exchange page for others to read and respond to, go to

NEWS FROM AROUND THE COUNTRY

>>Office for Faith-Based Programs<<

President Bush has established a White House office to assist faith-based organizations seeking federal funds to deal with social problems like addiction and homelessness. He has also called for a Center for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives in the Department of Health and Human Services and Department of Education. The Centers will review departmental policies and practices concerning compliance with Charitable Choice as it applies to funds under their control and to promote compliance by its partners in state and local governments. The Center in the Department of Education will focus on the agency's social programs, such as after-school programs.

COMMENTS:

We received a great deal of feedback on the working draft of:
"Mental Health in Schools: Guidelines, Models, Resources, & Policy Considerations"

If you haven't looked at the working draft this field-defining document, please do so (it is on our website at <http://smhp.psych.ucla.edu>) And if you have time, send us feedback.

Here's a sample of what we have been receiving:

"...important to emphasize the need for infrastructures for integrating services..."

"...very useful for providing concise information to a broad audience (legislators, Board of Education, Principals, parents, etc.)"

"...need to add underlying factors contributing to complexity of successful collaboration, such as organizational cultures..."

"...consider adding a section that addresses the need for demonstration of outcomes..."

"...the document contains a wealth of wonderful references and resources..."

"...the importance of program evaluation and quality of implementation should be stressed more."

"...As a follow up piece a self assessment document for school districts would be extremely helpful to move the "infrastructure" forward. "

THIS IS THE END OF THIS ISSUE OF ENEWS

Below is a brief description of our Center.

+++++

WHO ARE WE?

Under the auspices of the School Mental Health Project in the Department of Psychology at UCLA, we established a Center for Mental Health in Schools in 1995. The Project and Center are co-directed by Howard Adelman and Linda Taylor. The UCLA Center is one of two national centers initially funded in October 1995 by the Office of Adolescent Health, Maternal and Child Health Bureau (Title V, Social Security Act), Health Resources and Services Administration (Project #U93 MC 00175). Both Centers were refunded in October 2000 (for a 5 year cycle) with the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration's Center for Mental Health Services joining HRSA as a co-funder.

Our group at UCLA approaches mental health and psychosocial concerns from the broad perspective of addressing barriers to learning and promoting healthy development. Specific attention is given policies and strategies that can counter fragmentation and enhance collaboration between school and community programs.

We are involved in model development and implementation, training and technical assistance, and policy analysis. Our activities include gathering and disseminating information, materials development, direct assistance, and facilitating networking and exchanges of ideas.
