

Outline Revision

Home Involvement in Schools

After any discussion and as other aspects of the tutorial are explored, it is important to revisit the outline of what you are learning about home involvement and to make additions.

Because of the fundamental nature of the topic, we recommend creating a personal journal in which new ideas and insights are regularly recorded related to various key facets of the school's efforts to address barriers to learning and teaching. One section of the journal should focus on home involvement efforts. A periodic review of the journal will provide an ongoing process for considering revision in the ever-developing outline that reflects your ongoing learning on a given topic.

Also, if feasible, it is useful to pull together the study group periodically to discuss any major changes in thinking.
