

New Directions for Student Support ... an Initiative for Pennsylvania*

*School systems are not responsible for meeting every need of their students.
But, when the need directly affects learning, the school must meet the challenge.*

Despite decades of discussion about ensuring all students have an equal opportunity to succeed at school, reformers have paid little attention to rethinking the way schools provide student supports.

Until now! A national initiative for New Directions for Student Support is underway. The goal is to bring student support into the 21st Century by revolutionizing what schools do to address barriers to learning and teaching.

It's an Imperative for

- >>>any school designated as low performing
- >>>closing the achievement gap
- >>>making schools safe

Meeting the Challenges Requires Rethinking ALL Support Programs, Resources, and Personnel

Most people hear the term student support and think mainly about pupil service personnel (e.g., school psychologists, counselors, social workers, nurses) and the special services such staff provide. But, schools need and have many more resources they use to meet the challenge of ensuring all students have an equal opportunity to succeed at school.

Besides traditional support staff, learning support is provided by compensatory education personnel (e.g., Title I staff), resource teachers who focus on pre-referral interventions, and personnel who provide a variety of school-wide programs (e.g., after school, safe and drug free school programs). New Directions stem from rethinking how all these resources are used.

*Pennsylvania is one of an increasing number of states that have established a statewide initiative to pursue New Directions for Student Support. At the national level, over 30 organizations have signed on so far as co-sponsors of the initiative (see the other side of this announcement). Organizations around the state currently are being encouraged to sign on.
